Teachers are the backbone of our democracy. Teachers are the one who share knowledge to learners. They are the one who help the learners to enhance their skills and capabilities not only in academics but also in other fields.

In my three days deployment (observation), I encountered different attitudes of learners. I was deployed in Caranglaan Elementary School. I can say that I am grateful to be deployed in that school because I really feel their warm welcome. The school entertained us and they even give us a space for us to have rest in our free time. The moment that I entered in the classroom of my cooperative teacher, I feel like I'm home, in a good place. My cooperating teacher greet me and introduced me to her students. The students greet me as well. My cooperating teacher ask me some questions for her to be able to know who I am. She give me some tasks like printing papers and leave her students for a while together with me. The students are very active and all of them knows how to right, read, and answer math problems. I am really impressed when I heard them to solve the division problem using the Mother Tongue Language which is the Pangasinan. All of them knows how to speak in Pangasinan. When my cooperating teacher discussed their lesson using the Pangasinan language, I observed it well because I am also learning. I even take some notes about her strategies and techniques that she used. In our last day, the principal told us that they prepared a program for us. We have a LAC Session where they teach us about doing tests and introduced to us the amazing application that can surely help us in our demo. The school give us a two certificates. It is the Certificate of Participation and Certificate of Completion.

This experience helped me to mold my behavior and build my confidence in teaching. By observing those students and the teachers, it helped me to prepare myself in the field of teaching. I can say that the teachers are not just a teacher. They are also the hero of every learner.
