

FIELD STUDY 6
Deployment Narrative Report

Name: Aila Mae N. Evangelista

Year & Section: UP-FC1-BEED3-1

School Assigned: West Central Elementary School 1

Date of Deployment: February 27 - March 1, 2023

Cooperating Teacher: Mrs. Mellany B. Cruz

Grades & Sections observed: Grade 3 - Emerald

Experiencing this kind of observation as a future educator has a big impact on my future profession. They will always say that our course is the easiest among others, but they can't think of it that this course is the one that can help them to reach their dreams and goals in life.

One experience that I have gained during my 3-day observation period in West Central Elementary School I is that all of the teachers including the principal are approachable, friendly and disciplined as a professional inside and outside their classroom. They are acting as a role model to their students, able to develop rapport with learners and committed to the growth of their students. While the students are attentively listening to their teacher, and answering their activities in their seats quietly. My observation to my Cooperating Teacher, Mrs. Mellany Cruz, is that she is using a traditional assessment to her students because there is no tv or any 21st century technology in the classroom. Although it is traditional, I've seen that she is doing her best in order for her students to know and learn the lesson they are discussing. I also like the seating arrangement she created because according to her, she set up their seatmates according to their skills and knowledge. One is who could read already and one is who can barely read. I find it as one of her strategies in order for her students to help each other and build rapport with one another. Her behavior towards her students is like a mother-child relationship. She shows love to them, cares for them but also acts as a role model to them. She also treats me as a teacher and is also kind-hearted. If I have a question about a pangasinan word because it is so deep, I will approach her and she is willing to translate it to me. She is a kind-hearted teacher and a mother to her 2 daughters. She is also telling a story about her college life, her elder daughter that is also a teacher already, her middle daughter that is a graduating student as an education student too. While the students of Grade 3 - Emerald are so respectful because they greet me "Teacher Aila" everytime I enter their classroom. They treat me as one of their teachers during my observation. I've also received a "Goodbye and Thank you Teacher Aila" every dismissal. I also act as a teacher in front of them, as a role model and a future educator. Some students that have difficulty in reading and writing don't have any hesitation to approach me and it feels so overwhelming that they are trusting me to teach them. When I told them that it was my last day as an observer, they hugged me tightly and nearly cried. But I also told them that I will come back to them when they are already in Grade 4, as a Practice Teacher. And they are so happy and delighted hearing it! I wish I could teach them next year. This FS Observation was indeed memorable and unforgettable to me.

FIELD STUDY 6
Deployment Narrative Report

And with this kind of opportunity, I am now determined to become a future educator. Although it is hard, I will do my very best to get this degree. And to help my future students to learn, not just only on their academics but also on their relationships with other students and good manners towards their parents and teachers. Indeed teachers are forever a student because we are learning not just to teach, but also learning with the knowledge of our dear student. Seeing your students succeed means a lot as a teacher. And that's why teaching is a noble profession. We are willing to sacrifice our free time to teach students how to read, to check their assignments and do the activities for the next day. An effort for the instructional materials for the students to become more excited about the lesson. Spending their own money for the educational decorations for their classrooms. And sometimes giving a simple reward to their students. "A good education can change anyone. A good teacher can change everything."