

FIELD STUDY 6

Deployment Narrative Report

FIELD STUDY 6
Deployment Narrative Report

their teachers their entire attention. Also, it was noted that depending on the circumstance, they had a tendency to work both alone and cooperatively.

The atmosphere in the classroom, in my opinion, is one of fun, which inspires the students to want to learn. They are performing well and getting better at matching pitch, as judged in the first task, and they are learning more about melodic direction and contour as well as pace. The students are understanding topics that promote fun learning activities. This class of Mrs. Renna is effective with the students. They all show a high level of engagement and actively participate in class activities. Students are given numerous chances to participate in class, and when they do, they interact. When their names are called out during the exercise, the students are instructed to write their answers on board. From these observations, I was able to observe some instruction that was generally rather effective. The teacher does an excellent job at giving praise. I noticed that all the teachers and staff respect each child for what they are and help them live fully and happily to the best of their skills and ability. My teaching nurtures all aspects of development like social, cognitive, and physical. Also, she imparts education and values to her students. Upon observing how to educate young students, I learned that kinder may look like all fun and games like music, story time, dancing and art but the students are learning through play and creative activity. It is normal to have routines in class because this can assist students in learning through repetition and consistency. At their very young age, they can develop good habits and positive self-esteem because I believe that every student has their own pace. I look forward to my future observations and I hope I learn more about each age group so that I can better decide what level I want to teach on.