It's hard to teach. It's inevitable that you'll experience difficult times and occasionally require assistance. Introduce yourself to the administrator, cooperating teacher and to your pupils as well. Finding a mentor for your teaching is undoubtedly a wise move. When I discussed my lessons with my cooperating teacher, he provided me with a ton of ideas for activities that I might utilize. I cherished receiving suggestions for tried-and-true activities for my pupils, but I also cherished the advice and guidance they could offer to help me develop as a teacher. They might also be able to aid you in getting a teaching position. Making friends might not only benefit you as a teacher but also enhance the enjoyment of your day. Instead of eating lunch in your room every day to catch up on work, go to the lunchroom and socialize with other instructors. On the other hand, chat with the teachers. By taking the time to get to know others, you can find a lifelong companion.

As I have observed at West Central Elementary School 1, the teacher is using both traditional and modern assessment tools such as television, flashcards, blackboard, cartolina papers, and textbooks. When it comes to classroom management, the teacher is always monitoring the attendance of his pupils, the cleanliness of the classroom and organize seating arrangements. On facilitating the pupils, the teacher is using the guide on the side mode. He is not an authoritative person, he let his learners to construct their own knowledge and make meaning of them by guiding them through mentoring and monitoring them. In his 9 years of teaching he told me that teaching is not about always giving knowledge, it is all about understanding the hearts of young people by how they response and how they behave in the environment. He motivates and empowers me to pursue my education course that I can do it.

In my 3-days observation, I've realized that once you are a teacher then you are a lifetime student. The teaching profession is not just a merely job. It is a mission to help the holistic learners grow and develop. As an education student of University of Pangasinan it warms my heart when the pupils are greeting me with a genuine smile and joyfulness. I think I was called by the God for a purpose, he called me to reach out to the young people and on my next journey I will find my mission on why God called me and send me a signs to teach the young students.
