Being observant and empathetic, but also consistent and concise. You need to understand people before you can teach them During my 3 days observation. I was assigned at BONUAN BOQUIG ELEMENTARY SCHOOLI have experienced that even if there is a teacher in front, they still continue what they are doing compared to private school they are quiet if once the teacher are entered their room, But I saw that during their class hour, if the teacher ask them a question they answer is correct. I catch sight of in our class that even though they were doing something else, their ears were still listening. I experienced that the work of the teachers on Bonuan Boquig is not easy because they only have 30 minutes to teach their students, for the reason that the room of grade 5 and 6 cannot be used yet because the last earthquake affected their school. So in the little time that is given to them to teach, they make the most of it so that the children learn something and so that their time is not wasted. But even though they are doing shifts every day while the other rooms are not open yet, before the end of their class I notice that the children still learn something. I also noticed that learning and understanding is important. In the next day, At exact 7:30 in the morning, even though the teacher was not in the room the students know what they do, like cleaning the room and the memorable for me they'll stand up and they pray. after they prayed they said good morning and greeted each other. I saw that all of the students have discipline and respect to each other. A few minutes later their teacher came and announced that they had a fire drill at 9:00am. and when the bell was heard he sat down, they put their hands behind their backs, and they go outside. The students know what they doing outside. They know where are they place, and they listen to their teachers outside. fter the drill, they go to respective rooms and they continue what they doing.

Some of the teachers in Bonuan Boquig is still using a traditional materials, they using a Manila paper, I discovered also that other teachers are using a technology inside the classroom like television, they present a video on youtube and they watching it. So now I felt that even it's 21 st century, we can use a traditional materials for the students so that the child can better understand what has been taught, sometimes when we use traditional materials it can helps students to more understand their lesson.

But I advise that it is good to use our new generation materials that is integrate technology because in that way we catch the attention of our students.

I like how the teachers engage the students with their activities/games. The teacher collaboration, and supportive interactions in the classroom. I've learned a lot during my observation is to have a patience to all students, and you know how to manage the class inside/outside the classroom and also make sure that you have engagement for them so that you can catch their attention while you are discussing and they feel that they are belong.

I admire the relationship between the teacher and students. They know how to respect each other, when they are inside the classroom, they know their responsibility and they know when the limit is.

I adore the relationship with fellow teachers and parent. For me it is important to foster a relationship with other because COMMUNICATION is important between the parents and teacher. I believed that connections between parents and teachers have been shown to improve children's academic achievement. When parents and teachers work as partners, children do better in school and at home. In my 3 days observation journey at Bonuan Boquig. I gained a lot of knowledge and responsibility as a future Educator.
